What is Beauty Retouch?

Beauty retouching is a post-processing technique commonly used in photography and digital media to enhance the appearance of a subject, typically a person, by improving their skin, hair, and overall features. The goal of beauty retouching is to make the subject appear more polished and flawless while still maintaining a natural look. This process is often employed in fashion photography, portrait photography, advertising, and the entertainment industry.

It's important to note that the extent of beauty retouching can vary significantly, from very subtle enhancements to more dramatic transformations. The degree of retouching is typically based on the photographer's or client's preferences and the intended use of the image. However, excessive retouching can lead to an unrealistic and overly airbrushed appearance, which has sparked debates about body image and self-esteem in the media.
