Styling and Posting Your First Webcomic: Welcome to the course that will teach you how to style, format, and publish your debut Webcomic! Don't make the same mistakes that many beginners make when creating webcomic art; create a webcomic that you can look proud of!

Hello, my name is Matthew Dewey, and I am an author. It's hard to pinpoint how long ago my passion for writing started; however, if I recall, it began in elementary school. A child of early age with nothing in the way of words and plenty of things to write about, or in the early instances, draw on an entire page. I wrote my first novel at 19 years of age, then published many more, and finally began coaching other writers through classes and YouTube videos and coaching.

After all that, it's time to share with you what this course will mean. The course was designed to help you understand the basics of designing your Webcomic, deciding on the right style, and publishing your Webcomic through popular platforms. After creating my first Webcomic, I went into other styles and launched a second series. I then created an additional one following that. I played around with different styles and genres, gaining knowledge. Through all this, I realized my mistakes and how to improve my performance.

In this class, I will teach you how to organize your Webcomic and make it available for everyone to view!

I will demonstrate to you the following:

- What software and hardware are recommended for webcomic creation?
- The best service to publish your webcomics, along with some suggestions on selecting
- What are styles of Webcomic currently in style?
- What themes, colors, and characters work the best today?
- My top resolutions and formats
- How do you upload your Webcomic
- PLUS, more information as you go!
