The history of HTML0 HTML0's History Kodachrome was invented by Kodak as a significant film processing technique since its inception in 1935. It was utilized for photographs like the famous National Geographic Afghan refugee girl. However, it was shut down in the year 2010 and was used only as replicants of presets.

After you have used these filters, test a roll of the same kind! You can purchase at the local camera shop or on the internet.

More than 400 filter packs could be enough to fill your Lightroom libraries of presets. The packages we provide for presets don't have more than you'll need. We provide a handful of presets per design and, with or without minor adjustments to the exposure from you, we promise that you'll find exactly what you're looking.
